99204	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99236	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99251	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99261	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99272	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99290	99091	BCBST	When reporting the interpretation of physiologic data obtained in the course of a patient transport, this code is considered a component. It may be appropriate to reimburse for services not related to patient transport. As per CPT guideline, if the services described by code 99091 are provided on the same day the patient presents for an E/M service, these services should be considered part of the E/M service and not separately reported.

99301	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99333	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99345	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
99349	G0268	BCBST	Incidental removal of cerumen, such as with a curette or cotton swab, in the course of examining a patient would be considered part of the E/M service, and code G0268 should not be used to report this incidental service. Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

Payment for removal of cerumen in conjunction with an E/M service may be appropriate if, in addition to significant E/M services, the patient had impacted cerumen that required a separately identifiable service for removal (eg, lavage) which involved significant additional work. If G0268 is reported for cerumen removal by a physician on the same date as audiologic function testing, verify that significant E/M services were provided before reimbursing the E/M service with G0268.

99501	99350	BCBST	A certain level of Evaluation and Management services are inherent in the provision of home health procedures/services. As such, E/M codes should not be used to report these inherent E/M services. The edited code is redundant to the Home Health code to address this inappropriate billing. Note that CPT guidelines indicate that non-physician health care professionals who are authorized to use Evaluation and Management Home Visit codes (99341 - 99350) may report codes 99500 - 99539 if both services are performed, reporting the E/M service separately and using the modifier "-25" if significant separately identifiable E/M service is provided above and beyond the home health service. Reimbursement may be appropriate if review verifies that such E/M services were provided. Note also that as per CPT guidelines, physicians should not be using these home health procedure/services codes but should be using only the home visit codes.
