26740	26340	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of a finger joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 26340 is used to report finger joint manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 26340 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the finger joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 26340 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Code 26340 is used to report finger joint manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 26340 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the finger joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 26340 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

26841	26340	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of a finger joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 26340 is used to report finger joint manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 26340 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the finger joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 26340 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

26860	26340	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of a finger joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 26340 is used to report finger joint manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 26340 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the finger joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 26340 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

26952	26340	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of a finger joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 26340 is used to report finger joint manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 26340 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the finger joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 26340 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.
