Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24301	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

24310	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24360	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24363	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24400	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

24420	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

24577	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24620	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24802	24102	AAOS	AAOS specific edit.
24802	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

25000	25259	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the wrist joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

25020	25259	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the wrist joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
25355	25259	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the wrist joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale

25375	25259	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the wrist joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
25444	25259	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the wrist joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
25449	25259	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the wrist joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Code 25259 is used to report wrist manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 25259 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 25259 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.
