24149	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

Comprehensive Code	Component Code	Source	Rationale
24164	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.

24201	24300	BCBST	NCCI Standards of medical / surgical practice / Incidental manipulation of the elbow joint occurring at the time of the more definitive procedure is considered a part of the procedure. Code 24300 is used to report elbow manipulation under anesthesia. It is typically performed to loosen up contractures that have developed after trauma. As such, it will usually be reported alone, or possibly in conjunction with another joint manipulation procedure for treatment of contractures. For those musculoskeletal system codes for which 42300 is a subset (such as fracture or dislocation treatment), manipulation of the joint in the course of performing the procedure is considered a part of the procedure, and 24300 should not be reported in addition to the definitive procedure to account for this inherent manipulation.
